We noticed that applications with more than one borrower are not printing the "Evidence of Joint Application" disclosure. That is why at the top of the borrower page in Reverseware it has a message to call reverseware support or send an email BEFORE printing the application docs. I know it seems redundant to do that every time there is more than one borrower, but I guess until they fix reverseware it is what has to be done. Alternatively, once we see the "Evidence of Joint Application" they are using, we can always make one ourselves to use in the package. The evidence of joint application must be signed and cannot be handled as an unsigned redisclosure.

Yes, that is correct.

In the past if I had 2 borrowers (husband/wife) in reverseware, an "evidence of joint application" would print with the application package, but it doesn't seem to be printing anymore. Is that why we are supposed to contact reverseware every time we have more than one borrower?
